

STANDING ORDER NO. L&O/52/2022

POLICE PUBLIC INTEFRACE : INSTRUCTIONS

INTRODUCTION

Police is often considered to be one of the most visible agents of the Indian Government. No other government organisation/department interacts with the public as often as the Police does. Interactions between the Police and the public take place (a) when a citizen enters a Police station, as well as (b) when a Police officer goes out on the street. The quality of these interactions is crucial as no Police organisation can fully succeed in preventing crime, maintaining peace/security and heralding social change without the involvement of the public.

However, an average citizen still hesitates to accept a policeman as his friend and protector. Usually, a member of the public seeks police help under stressful circumstances when he is unsure of his reception and treatment. In his mind, there is always a lurking possibility of being harassed rather than being helped. The quality of Police – Public relations/interactions is often marred by these negative stereotypes, which is also indicative of the general alienation between the Police force and the community.

It is crucial to bridge any gaps in Police public interface and to define the broad contours for healthy interactions. It is worth noting that those Police Officers, who have succeeded in winning public confidence have usually found a way to present themselves in a non-threatening manner. Accordingly, a continuous effort is needed at all levels of the force to improve relations between the police and the public. All interactions with the public, regardless of where such interactions take place either within the Police station or out on the streets must be conducted with courtesy, politeness empathy and should be characterised by professionalism.

There are several occasions, when in the course of his/her duty, a police personnel, has to be firm in dealing with the public. But firmness does not means rudeness. Firmness can be combined with politeness and, in various situations, should also be accompanied with a smile. Courtesy is not at all a sign of weakness but on the contrary, an expression of confidence. If the police deals with the public courteously it will win approval, sympathy and confidence in return. Police credibility will go up and increased public cooperation that will follow and will make our work easier.

POLICE PUBLIC INTERACTIONS WITHIN THE POLICE STATION

Persons seeking any kind of Police assistance, who visit police stations should be heard with patience and should be treated with utmost courtesy and sympathy so that the general public feels confident in approaching the police. Sincere efforts must be made to redress grievances of the public by adopting a proactive approach. Every effort must be made to take care of the visitor's problem. If the visitor has a request which cannot be handled by the Police Station then such visitor must be equipped with every information necessary for the resolution of his/her problem. This includes referring him to other agencies for assistance. A visitor must never be turned away by simply stating, "We don't handle that kind of problem.".

It is important that the right functional and behavioural skills are imbibed early on among the members of the force. Accordingly, the contents of the present standing order must be given wide publicity at the Delhi Police Academy and Police Training Schools besides being discussed regularly during briefings and sampark sabhas conducted by senior officers. For e.g., the Police Station staff must be taught to use the following format when attending phone calls received at the PS - "Police Station Karol Bagh, How may I help you?" or "Mein aap ki kaise sahayata kar sakta hoon?". In addition to this, workshops/interactive sessions may also be held at the District level by trainers/professionals from the hospitality sector to help with the hands-on training of the staff.

Further, police personnel working at the cutting edge of Police public interactions must be sensitized to the needs of the different categories of distressed persons such as women, children, disabled, elderly, transgenders etc. To equip staff with the right etiquette and manners to deal with the aforementioned categories of persons, periodic workshops on sensitization should be conducted by senior officers at Police Station level. Any uncivil/rude behaviour, callousness and bias observed must be corrected immediately.

In addition to equipping Police personnel with the right professional and behavioural skills, it is equally important that every Police station is equipped with the right physical infrastructure. This will help bring about a degree of order and sophistication to the environment of the Police station and help complainants/visitors feel welcome and at ease, thereby making Police public interface more productive and fruitful. To this effect, the SHO must ensure that:-

- (a) Police Station must have sufficient greenery to give it a pleasant look.
- (b) Reception area must be clean, well-lit and uncluttered. It must be indicated using proper signage. There must be adequate seating arrangement, drinking water facilities and access to basic stationary.
- (c) The Duty Officer (as per SO No. L&O/15/2022), Public Facilitation Desk Officer (as per SO No. L&O/09/2022) and the Woman Helpdesk Officer shall try to be of help to the complainants/visitors to the best of their abilities.
- (d) Police stations must be equipped with ramps, suitable doors for wheelchair access among others to ensure that they can be accessed by persons with disabilities.
- (e) Visitors particularly women, the disabled and the elderly must be provided easy access to clean toilets within the premises of the police station.

Besides, police personnel stationed at the police stations, the beat constables, the traffic police personnel and staff in specialized units such as Airport and Immigration can also make valuable contribution towards improving the police image, if they present a cheerful and helpful image to the public. The normal citizens' daily contact with the police is largely at the level of the traffic constable or the beat constable. Their over-all behaviour towards the public can go a long way in making or marring police's image. Similarly, the MPV staff, which provides police presence and keeps frequent contacts with the public, can also win public approval with ease. Courtesy costs nothing at all but the faith and confidence it builds up for the police is extremely valuable.

POLICE PUBLIC INTERACTIONS OUTSIDE THE POLICE STATION- COMMUNITY POLICING

The essence of Police public interactions outside the Police Station is encapsulated in the concept of Community Policing. Community Policing is a philosophy of policing in which the police organisation and law – abiding/public spirited citizens work together in creative ways to address contemporary community problems. Community Policing in a nutshell may be understood as a collaboration between the Police and the community to identify and solve various policing related issues. It helps the Police get close to the community and is therefore, the best strategy to win the trust of the people and earn goodwill. The main objective of community policing is to improve Police public interface in order to promote peace/security.

Currently, Delhi Police is running several initiatives of community policing. The various schemes of Delhi Police have been discussed in brief below:

- A. Police Mitra: Detailed in SO No. Crime/01/2022, this scheme is aimed at involving civil society in crime prevention and maintenance of law & order. The objective is to achieve effective policing with active involvement of local citizens. Police Mitras assist the local police in picket duties, traffic management, collection of intelligence and law and order arrangements etc.
- B. Yuva: Detailed in SO No. Crime/02/2022, this scheme was launched keeping in mind the problems of youth in Delhi. YUVA aims to wean away young adults and underprivileged children, who, for want of proper education and sports facilities, tend to take to crime. Delhi Police takes initiatives like organizing sports activities, painting workshops, vocational training etc. to channelize the energy of young adults and underprivileged children.
- C. Shashakti: Detailed in SO No. SPUWAC/04/2022. Self-Defence Training is imparted to girls/women for self-protection and empowering them with skills to ward off aggressors and to report such acts to the police without hesitation. Various training courses are organized in schools, colleges, community centres, parks and JJ Clusters by SPUWAC and district CAW cells.
- D. Prahari: Detailed in SO No. L&O/76/2022, Prahari, a force multiplier for policing, is an initiative of Delhi Police for involving stakeholders like guards and chowkidars in prevention of crime. Prahari aims at institutionalizing partnerships and cooperation between the police, public and private sector security providers in community policing. The scheme aims to identify crime prone areas and enlist the support of security guards by providing them with security equipment.
- E. Eyes and Ears: Detailed in SO No. Crime/07/2022, under the "Eyes and Ears" scheme, various sections of public like rehriwalas, chowkidars, patriwalas, security guards, parking attendants, three wheeler/taxi drivers, bus drivers/conductors, porters, shopkeepers, property agents, second hand car dealers, landlords, members of RWA/MWA, cyber café owners and PCO owners, guest house owners and other alert citizens are involved in providing information regarding suspicious activities of individuals and crimes. These categories of citizens are encouraged to act as the "eyes and ears" of the police.

- F. Senior Citizens Scheme: Detailed in SO No. L&O/16/2022, this scheme envisages regular meetings of beat staff with senior citizens of the area and regular security audit of senior citizens. The mobile app launched under this scheme, facilitates easy registration by senior citizens and access to the names and telephone numbers of the Beat Officers by the senior citizen.
- G. Neighbourhood watch: In order to promote a long lasting partnership with the community and to enhance safety and reduce the fear of crime, the mechanism of Neighbourhood Watch Scheme has been successfully run by Delhi Police in the city. It aims at enhancing the security of the neighbourhood by harnessing the capabilities of residents. The residents and the local police are partners in the scheme and work in a coordinated effort to improve the security of the area concerned.
- H. Aman Committees: Aman Committees have yielded significant results in bridging the gap between the police and the public, particularly in promoting harmony in areas that are identified to be communally sensitive.
- I. Thana Committees: Thana committees must be organised at the PS level, with the DCP as the chairman and the ACP, Sub Division as the convenor. In addition to this, 25 respectable members of the area shall be made members, who shall be screened carefully by the DCP in consultation with the ACP, Sub Division and the SHO of the concerned PS. The committee must meet at least once a month in the premises of the PS. A copy of the minutes of the meeting must be sent to the concerned Joint CP for perusal.
- J. Traffic wardens: A Traffic Warden Wing has been instituted as a part of the citizens voluntary force. Members chosen to be part of this wing are respectable citizens desirous of giving some of their time to assist the traffic staff for improving the traffic conditions in the city.
- K. Himmat Plus App: This app was launched in collaboration with Uber. The main objective of this mobile application is to ensure the safety and security of women travelling by cabs. The app is bilingual and is a utility app that can be used all sections of the society including women.
- L. Child Safety Initiatives
1. Operation Milap: Detailed in Circular No.14/2005, under this project, the Anti Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) of the Delhi Police develops information, rescues the trafficked/kidnapped child and reunite them with their families.

2. Muskaan Operation Smile: Police teams in plain clothes visit spots where child beggars/labourers are most likely to be found. Pictures and details of such children are shared with NGOs/different police stations, with the object to trace their parents and reunite them with their families.
 3. Pehchan: An initiative by Delhi Police to safeguard vulnerable children belonging to Below Poverty Line (BPL) families. The programme has been initiated with the aim of identifying and creating photographic records of minors/children residing in resettlement colonies, jhuggies and belonging to the BPL category.
- M. Helplines: Delhi Police has launched various helplines so that the citizens can approach them hassle free in hour of the need.

1.	ERSS Helpline	112
2.	Women Helpline	1091
3.	North-Eastern Helpline	1093
4.	Missing Persons Helpline	1094
5.	Eyes & Ears Helpline	1090
6.	Traffic Helpline	1095
7.	Senior Citizens Helpline	1291

IMPORTANCE OF ACCESSIBILITY TO POLICE PUBLIC RELATIONS

An important facet of healthy Police – Public relations is that all police officials should be easily accessible to the public of their area. Police Officials should engage with the community by organizing regular interactions with them. Often, the common perception of the public is that the local level officers are not available to hear their grievances and do not respond to them satisfactorily. Therefore, police officials must hear members of public in their offices and do their best to ensure that their complaints are properly looked into.

Accordingly, the SHO must designate two hours daily when he shall meet complainants in the Police Station. Such designated time must be prominently displayed at the Public Facilitation Desk, the DO's room as well as the SHO's room and should be given wide publicity. Further, the ACP, Sub Division shall also be available to meet complainants twice a week including on Saturday, when he/she shall conduct public meetings by way of Jan Sunwai sat a police station falling within the Sub Division.

In addition to this, police officials must also reach out to the public and meet them in their areas by conducting Jan sampark (as detailed in SO No. 403/2012) at preferably, a neutral venue like a community centre, public auditorium, college/school building etc. Adequate notice should be given to the members of public in the area stating that DCP or the Joint CP/Range would be available at a particular time and date where members of public can come and meet them without any prior appointment, air their grievances and submit their complaints/petitions. It must also be ensured that the complainant is appraised periodically of the progress made on his/her complaint by way of 'Aapka Update' (as per the provisions of SO No.Vig.& Pub.Tpt/03/2021).

Besides being available and accessible to the public, Officers should also move around in their areas and visit important mohallas and localities in their jurisdiction, with a view to:-

- (a) promoting, better police public relations which is of incalculable asset in the maintenance of law and order in a democratic set up such as ours.
- (b) acquiring first-hand knowledge of law and order and traffic problems by developing new sources of information.
- (c) listening to public complaints and arranging to redress their grievances on the spot where possible.
- (d) having independent knowledge of the working of the police station concerned and recommend suggestions for improvement.
- (e) Acquiring personal knowledge of bullies and rowdies and their activities so as to be able to check unholy alliance between them and some of the black sheep among our force.
- (f) Checking investigations made by the IOs, by occasionally visiting the scenes of important old cases, by interviewing complaints/witnesses and by referring to case diaries.
- (g) Enquiring into rumours and general complaints of police malpractices or corruption.
- (h) Collecting information where possible about the activities of registered bad characters and examining them in the presence of respectable persons of the mohalla.

In addition to the abovementioned functional instructions/ indicators to be adhered to and followed by police personnel when interacting with the public, Annexure-A of the Standing Order contains more general guidelines which must be internalised by police personnel for maintaining healthy interactions with public. Further, Annexure-B lists the various tasks/responsibilities of the Police that the public expects it to perform and Annexure-C lays down the principles that must guide the police while discharging their duties.

ANNEXURE - A

1. People generally view a Police Officer as a threat. They avoid the Police and therefore Police fail to get their cooperation. The citizens are generally reluctant to contact the Police. Some people regard the Police as their downright enemies.
2. Needless to say that Indian Police today stands as a much maligned 'tool of repression'. It invokes and suffers popular wrath for the mistakes of others. Policemen are condemned as 'Protectors of elitist status quo' and for want of popular support, remain an exploited lot with very little professional fulfilment.
3. The Police suffers from certain limitations. The nature of Police jobs and limitations of the Police profession pose special and complicated problems in the area of Police community relations. Some of these special limitations are:-
 - a) Police tasks are generally unpleasant. They tend to curb liberty of certain people.
 - b) Police suffers from a historical hangover of popular perceptual hostility.
 - c) Police does not have patronage or favours to distribute.
 - d) Police is regarded as an agent or defender of status quo.
 - e) Police officials at lower levels are ill equipped for jobs, needing mental faculty.
 - f) Police image is irretrievably lost when violent disorders occur.
4. Notwithstanding these predicaments, the Indian democratic system expects and needs happy and healthy police community relations. Apart from long term social gains, the Police organization also tends to benefit by improvement in Police public relations. With better police community relations Police gains/as follows:-
 - a) Its professional tasks will ensure better popular cooperation and support.
 - b) Its image will improve and so will its capacity to resist interference.

- c) Its professional prestige will rise in popular esteem and will strengthen its case for better service conditions.
 - d) Its role as defender of democratic institutions will enhance and it will be in a position to function as 'limb of law'.
5. The ways out from the present impasse are:-
- a) A switch over to the philosophy of citizen Police.
 - b) An extension of Police functions in positive sense, and
 - c) A thorough going reform in the recruitment and training systems of the Police organisation.
6. Before we proceed further, we have to see what are the grievances against the Police:-
- a) Their uncivil behaviour, callousness, rudeness, high handedness, oppressive conduct, vindictive attitudes;
 - b) Burking of crime;
 - c) Padding of evidence;
 - d) Delay in taking up complaints;
 - e) False implication of innocent persons;
 - f) Partiality in investigation;
 - g) Succumbing to political pressures.
 - h) Collusion with anti-social elements;
 - i) Extortion and corruption; and
 - j) Ill will for not getting progress of the Case/Complaint.

It cannot certainly be said that all these faults/defects are to be found in all policemen. But here and there, they do exist in a greater or less degree in quite a few of us and to that extent it may have to be said that the criticism is not unjustified.

7. Below is a resume of defects listed above and what we ought to do to remedy the situation:-

A. Treatment of Visitors to Police Stations:

Quite often, when a person, may be a victim of a crime or just a person wanting some assistance, approaches a Police Station Officer, he is not received with the will to help. When a victim comes to the Police Station, he is in an excited state of mind and even before recording what he has to say if the SHO or his representative tries to put him at ease by saying a few words of assurance and consolation, it is likely to go a long way in creating a good impression about the Police in general. It will be a good gesture if when a victim completely smeared in blood is seen entering a Police Station, the Police Officer there walks up a few steps to meet him, uses a few words of consolation and even arranges to give him a cup of tea or coffee. Eventually, it may appear that the offence committed on this victim is only non-cognizable and Police cannot investigate it nor arrest the accused immediately, but the earlier treatment meted out to the person has prevented any misunderstanding about the intentions of Police. Complainants, witnesses and especially people in distress, who visit, police stations should be treated with utmost courtesy and sympathy so that the general public feels confident in approaching the police.

B. Treatment of witnesses

We send summon for witnesses to come to the Police Station for recording their statements, but we fail to be present at the assigned time and the witness has to wait there without anyone explaining as to why the officer is not present and when he is expected to be back there. The witness either lingers on or leaves the place. In the latter case, we get angry with him. Sometimes, even when the officer is present in the Police Station he just does not care to look at the witness or attend to him promptly, but goes on doing various other jobs. This certainly annoys the witness who cannot afford to waste his time at the Police Station.

C. Searches

While conducting searches if we have the right approach there is no reason why any criticism can be levelled against us. If you find anything incriminating at the end of the search please say: "Excuse me, I certainly do not wish to offend you, but we had some information and we had to check it up". [Standing Order No.Vig.&Pub. Tpt./01/2021].

D. Arrests

In the matter of arrest also, we can be decent. Firstly, it is not mandatory that every person to be prosecuted must be arrested. We can make exceptions in deserving cases. When we decide to arrest, however, we can do that also in a good way. But quite a few of us deliberately choose the wrong time for arrest, handcuff and rope the accused and parade him through the streets when it is not necessary to do so. With the types of offences multiplying fast, persons from various walks of life, who would not otherwise have committed crimes as commonly understood, come to be prosecuted for various violations by them. We certainly can avoid arresting such accused and do just what is needed under law. This will not give them cause to criticise Police behaviour and action. (Standing Order No.L&O/70/2022) & Standing Order No. Lic. & Leg./18/2022).

It is also important that the accused persons are treated in accordance with the laws. The law gives us enough powers to deal with all criminals and recourse to force and third degree methods, whatever the provocation, must be avoided at all costs. Nothing affects the police image as adversely as a death in police custody and all officers and men are expected to scrupulously ensure that whatever the provocative circumstances, there is, in future, no incidence of death in police custody.

In such matters, sometimes we have a different way of dealing with different persons. We give one type of treatment to influential, powerful (physically, financially, politically) persons. We are criticised for being partial. All persons whether rich or poor, powerful or weak, are alike before the law and our dealing with them also should be so.

E. Burking of crime

Burking of crime is generally done for statistical purposes. This attitude develops if supervisory officers go by only figures. The system of assessing performance of subordinates on the basis of statistics demoralises honest and sincere workers and encourages the cheating type. Our aim should certainly be to bring down crime, to improve the percentages of detection and conviction, but this should not be shown or seen through false figures. What should be valued is honest and sincere efforts and efficient investigation. If such efforts are there results are bound to come.

F. Attention to Petitions

All Police officers generally receive a large number of petitions. Acknowledgements do not go in many cases. Enquiries are not completed for months together and the petitioner just does not know what is happening. After sending a reminder or two, he gives up hope and forms a very bad opinion of the Police. The public, even the educated amongst them do not know various provisions of law even in petty matters. Quite often, these petitions contain matters, which do not come under the strict purview of the Police. Somehow people have a feeling that whatever wrong they see or feel has to be corrected by the Police. These petitions have to be attended to promptly. A prompt reply giving necessary advice on steps to be taken by the petitioner to get his grievances redressed would create a lot of goodwill for us. Quite a number of petitions are for seeking protection against harassment by bullies, goondas, and anti-social elements. If we mean to give protection we can do so even in non-cognizable matters. Persons so benefited are quite prompt in communicating their gratefulness.

G. Enforcement of Traffic Laws etc.

Another area of our work where we sometimes earn unpopularity is the enforcement of social legislation and traffic regulations. With regard to the traffic regulations, it always happens that while introducing certain restrictions like one way traffic or closure of some roads to traffic, some persons are bound to be greatly inconvenienced. But with regard to prosecuting violators of such regulations police have, discretion. If that discretion is used freely and judiciously, there may not be occasion for public criticism of high-handed and rude behaviour to decent citizens by the Police. In matters of traffic enforcement, Police attitude should be to educate and with courtesy and firmness.

H. Dealing with crowds, agitators, unrests

This is another matter where Police are exposed to criticism. Even here, while being quite firm in the interest of public peace, we still can minimise occasions for criticism if we do not allow ourselves and our judgment to be influenced by outside pressures. If we know our laws, if we remember our training, if we keep our wits about us, if we keep the poise and balance of our mind in the midst of disturbed situations and act as the occasion demands and as our training dictates us, we are likely to come out unscathed. We have also to be prepared to explain our actions and face consequences, if an occasion arises.

I. Public Problems and Inconveniences

There are certain other areas of public sufferings where we can take initiative in redressing them. The major section of the society can be dubbed as silent sufferers. They murmur amongst themselves but very rarely go up to the authorities with specific complaints about the nuisance they suffer. A policeman who is conscious of his role as a public benefactor should be continuously spotting such nuisances and even when specific complaints are not received, he should, on his own initiative, take steps to remove the nuisance or at least to reduce it. For e.g., the nuisance due to loud speakers is a matter where the police can act on their own initiative and obtain public approval of their action.

Public appearances in uniform of Police officers in shopping and market areas on occasions other than of agitations, disturbances, riots, goes a long way in attracting the appreciative and sympathetic eye of the public towards them. During busy hours checking traffic, clearing pavement hawkers or instructing hotel keepers against playing music in violation of the hotel license conditions, clearing hand carts, hawkers from crowded shopping areas, and sometimes even standing on traffic points to control and regulate traffic meets public approval widely. The public appreciate this kind of work. They come to know us better and they appreciate such corrective steps when the emphasis is more on improvement than on prosecution of such persons.

J. Political Pressures

There is often loose talk of political pressures, which interfere in the discharge of policemen's normal functions. There are persons, who want the police to act as they like. They may be politicians. They could be commercial magnates. There are police officers, who allow themselves to be subjected to such pressures for mutual benefit. But an honest, upright, sincere, conscientious and hard-working policeman does not have to succumb to such pressures. If he is courteous, and polite while dealing with such influential persons, he can get away from being subjected to any such pressure.

With regard to the transfer of subordinates also sometimes pressures are brought. If the Officer concerned takes on himself the responsibility of enquiring into the grievances of the party, who is seeking such transfers and actually does so, the transfer is not required to be affected if there is no fault on the part of the policeman or officer whose transfer is asked for. Some of us get greatly upset only at receiving such requests and such approaches being made. Then we behave in a curt or rude manner and this actually lands us into trouble. This kind of dealing with such matters by superior Officers and giving due protection to the subordinates boosts up the morale and confidence of the subordinates, which necessarily leads to better performance by them, which results in improving the general police image. It is the responsibility of the superior officers to act as a kind of shock absorber and protect the subordinates from such shocks.

K. Personal conduct of Policemen

Efforts on the part of senior officers to punish corrupt subordinates and to try to check corruption in the department are always lauded by the Public. It would be interesting to find out how many of the total number of detected cases of corruption in the Police are the result of steps taken by the departmental superiors and not the result of action taken by the Anti-Corruption or Vigilance Bureau. The integrity, the uprightness, the impartial attitude, honesty and sincerity of a Policeman will always place him quite high in the esteem of the public and will also give him sufficient strength to withstand various types of strains, pressures that he is required to face from time to time in the discharge of his official functions. When off duty, policemen, irrespective of their rank must act and behave as ordinary citizens. If they expect free cinema, bus travel, and goods and services a gratis, encroachment on the rights and privileges of others, they will never enhance the image of police in addition to being guilty of professional misconduct.

L. Police Public Relations:-

Any police Officer, who wants to improve the image of the police in public has to cultivate three qualities:

- Patience;
- Psychological insight into the working of mind particularly under stress; and
- Sympathetic attitude.

Since we are over worked or we think that we are over worked, we seldom are prepared to spare time and energy to listen to the people, who come to us in Police Stations/Police Posts and offices. We do not realise that the people, who come to us after spending a lot of money and time expect at least a patient hearing from Police. So we must spare some time and devote some energy to the people, who visit us with their grievances. It does not mean that we should do anything illegal for them or false cases should be registered against anyone. Whenever we are unable to do anything, which the people ask us, we should explain to them politely and patiently our legal and statutory limitations. The trouble arises, when police tries to pose that they have all the powers and when they are called upon to help they get themselves entangled in illegal activities.

A Police Officer has to know the psychology of people generally and particularly those under stress. We must understand that some people visit us to derive illegal/undue benefits. At the same time we must realise that a very large number of people visit us when they are in a state of distress and they find themselves under strain. Generally an Indian avoids police as a devout person avoids the devil. However, if we treat the people with courtesy and help them within the law they may come to realise our difficulties too.

Policemen have enormous powers under law to help and harass people. Liberty is sacred and honour is still more sacred to people. Yet police has not only legal powers to arrest offenders but also resorts to such misuse of powers that people feel dishonoured. So we must use our powers only when there is complete evidence against the accused person. Normally Police should Protect the Liberty and Honour of the people, particularly of the weaker sections, womenfolk, children, old people and the poor. Under the law police has powers and a powerful person must have sympathetic attitude towards the unfortunately weaker/poorer human beings. Police must cultivate sympathy for the People.

M. Need for Ideals

There is a need to motivate all ranks on correct lines. We must set before police high standards of conduct.

ANNEXURE - B

A POLICEMAN SHOULD:-

- Welcome the people who visit them, respect old people and women folk.
- Respect the people he serves and not talk down to them.
- Respect, the liberty, rights and dignity of all citizens, as guaranteed by law and the constitution.
- Be impartial in all cases.
- Identify criminals, offenders and criminal activity and where appropriate apprehend offenders and assist in subsequent court proceedings.
- Identify problems that are potentially serious law enforcement problems.
- Reduce the opportunities for the commission of crimes through preventive patrolling and other measures.
- Create and maintain a feeling of security in the community.
- Resolve local conflicts.
- Police is an investigating and regulative agency. It is not a punitive agency. It should, therefore, not hand out punishments, nor try to "teach a lesson" to anyone.
- Aid individuals, who are in danger of physical harm.
- Facilitate the movement of people and vehicles.
- Assist those who cannot, care for themselves.
- Provide other services on an emergency basis.
- Pay for everything you purchase or damage.

ANNEXURE - C

Sl. No.	Principles of Metropolitan Police	Principles of Police Conduct in India
1.	To prevent crime and disorder as an alternatives to their repression by military force and severity of legal punishment.	The Police must bear faithfully alliance to the constitution of India and respect and uphold the rights of the citizens as guaranteed by it.
2.	To recognise always that the power of the Police to fulfil their functions and duties is dependent on public approval of their existence, actions and their ability to secure and maintain public respect.	The Police are essentially a law enforcing agency. They should not question the propriety of necessity of any, duly enacted law. They should enforce the law firmly and impartially without fear or favour.
3.	To recognise always that to secure and maintain the respect and approval of the public means also the security of the willing co-operation of the public in the task of security observance of laws.	The Police should recognise and respect the limitations of their powers and functions. They should not usurp or even seem to usurp the functions of the judiciary. Nor should they revenge individuals and punish the guilty.
4.	To recognize always that the extent to which the co-operation of the public can be secured diminishes, proportionately, the necessity of the use of physical force and compulsion for achieving police objectives.	In securing the observance of law or in maintaining order, Police should use the methods of persuasion, advice and warning. Should these fail and the application of force becomes inevitable, only the absolutely minimum force required in the circumstances should be used.

5.	To seek and to preserve favour not by pandering to public opinion but by constantly demonstrating absolutely impartial service to law, in complete independence of policy and without regard to the justice or injustice of the substance of individual laws by ready offering of individual service and friendship to all members of public without regard to their wealth or social standing; by ready exercise of courtesy and friendly good- humour; and by ready offering of individual sacrifice in protecting and preserving life.	The primary duty of the police is to prevent crime and disorder and the Police must recognize that the test of their efficiency is the absence of both and not the visible evidence of Police action when all other methods have failed.
6.	To use physical force only when the exercise of persuasion, advice, warning is found to be insufficient to obtain public co-operation to an extent necessary to secure observance of law or to restore order; and to use only the minimum degree of force.	The Police must recognise that they are members of the public with the only difference that in the interest of the community and on its behalf, they are employed to give full time attention to duties which are normally incumbent on every citizen to perform.
7.	To maintain at all times a relationship with the public that gives reality to the historic tradition that the police are the public and that the public are the Police; the Police being only members of the public who are paid to give full-time attention. To duties which are incumbent on every citizen, in the interests of community welfare & existence.	The Police should realise that the efficient performance of their duties will be dependent on the extent of cooperation they receive from the people. This in turn, will depend on their ability to win public approval for their conduct and actions and then to earn the retain public confidence.
8.	To recognise always the need for strict adherence to police executive function, and to refrain from even seeming to usurp the powers of the judiciary or avenging individuals or the state, and of non-authoritatively judging guilt and punishing the guilty.	The Police should be sympathetic and considerate to all people and should be constantly working for their welfare. They must always be ready to provide individual service and to render necessary assistance to all without regard to their wealth or social standing.

9.	To recognise always that the test of police efficiency is the absence of crime and disorder, and not the visible evidence of police action in dealing with them.	The Police shall always be courteous and well mannered; they should be unattached; they should possess dignity and courage, and should cultivate character and the trust of the people.
